

ATTEMPTS TO KILL HIS WIFE IN COURT

Julius Stellman, Ex-Jailbird, Restrained by Officer from Harming Her.

Another tragedy in the West Side Court-room was narrowly averted today when the court officers stopped a prisoner, Julius Stellman, from making a murderous assault on his wife. The prisoner, an ex-jail bird and burglar, will have time to repent of his action during 30 days of the hardest labor the island can furnish.

Stellman has been employed of late as a stableman at N. 475 East Eighty-third street. His first—and only—lawful wife, lives at No. 52 West Fifty-second street. Their two children have been in charge of the Department of Charities for the last three years. Yesterday Mrs. Stellman went to Mr. Creighton, a man of the Charities Department and complained that her husband would not support the children. Stellman was arrested.

Served Time for Bigamy.
When the man was taken before Magistrate Cornell today Mrs. Stellman told the Magistrate that her husband had deserted her seven years ago and had been arrested for non-support at the time, serving six months. After coming out, said Mrs. Stellman, her husband married a woman named Kate Brill, and was arrested and sentenced to three years in Sing Sing for bigamy. His sentence expired last October, she said, and since then he had done nothing for the children.

Stellman then said that he loved his wife still, but that she had hounded him. He said that while he was serving in Sing Sing she sent him insulting picture postcard and exhibited two one showing a convict behind the bars with the line, "If you can't come, write." and another showing a man kicking another man, the line being, "Contents received and duly noted." These he said caused his proud spirit.

Magistrate Cornell looked at the building ex-convict and his pale little wife and put Stellman under $200 bond to pay his wife for the children's support.

Stellman was unable to pay and after glaring at his wife he seized the paper made up, crumpled it into a ball and threw it at Mrs. Stellman. The court officers leading him away remarking some thing said for an order to bring the ex-convict back for re-sentence, when it the door of the pen Stellman broke away.

Restrained by Officers.
With a bound he jumped half-way across the court-room, making a vicious lunge with his fist at his wife, who huddled back in one corner and faintly. Stellman was springing upon her, with curses and threats to kill her, when Officer Hughes and Policemen Crogan and Green jumped on him, bearing him to the floor. The jailbird gave them a hard fight, but was finally subdued. "You dirty bound, I'll see you get all that's coming to you," cried Magistrate Cornell, who had seen the more act. The Magistrate immediately called up the island workhouse and ordered that Stellman be put at the hardest labor. When Stellman was arrested last night he cursed so vilely on the street car that the conductor had to ask the policeman in charge to take him off the car and spare the women passengers.
